Yes, we too like good news but now we're only interested in the truth

Right now the story about Ron's family is told on Marty Rathbun's blog. Several oldtimers are writing their testimonies of the period from 1979 to 1986 and this is great reading.

The understanding of this period is building and so it is getting more and more clear just how much scientologists hate to see Ron's family treated like this.

The answers on what took place is there in this blog:

Just a warning about Rathbun's blog: It has gotten very much better but there are still some strange points, this was one of the reasons I removed the permanent link to it.

I just recently read this blog and comments and there was a comment from a guy who called himself "OTVIII".

Rathbun didn't like what the guy wrote so instead of calling him OTVIII Rathbun called him OTVII and later Rathbun explained this with these words:

Rathbun:

"...actually I changed it because there is no possible way the person honestly did OT VIII – couldn't have. (Marty from Mosey's computer)"

I find this very strange and absolutely off. Rathbun is saying that he can tell if a guy is OTVIII or not just by a comment on a blog? And he does so on a comment for all to see.

And Rathbun soon was supported by a "Axiom38" who commented to OTVIII like so:

Axiom38:

"So don't go pointing any fingers around here, because as MR pointed out... what the Hell have you done about it?"

Of course now that you're here your help is appreciated but making others wrong is typically handled well before OT VIII !"

This is just silly. I can't believe these guys! It's bullying to say the least.

I commented on this. Here's my comment: :

Tunedal:

"This post and all comments here about Rons family are awfully valuable but MR and Axiom38: Please, this is not a place to tell OTVIII what state he has attained or not attained."

Since I posted these remarks about Rathbun and Axiom38 my last comment to the blog was not accepted – it was a welcoming note to new independent Lana Mitchell.

It looks like Mr Rathbun is considering his public C/S:ing of a guy who claims to be OTVIII is alright.

I am an independent Scientologist and my saying is as valid as anyone else's. I will keep on speaking my mind. None of them are above correction.
